CONCEPTUAL DEVELOPMENT PLAN

May 2025

Location: Saline County

Established: 1970

Size: 2 acres

MISSION STATEMENT

The mission of Sappington Cemetery State Historic Site is to preserve the gravesites of Dr. John Sappington, Governor Claiborne Fox Jackson, and Governor Meredith Miles Marmaduke, and their spouses and extended families, and to interpret their roles in Missouri history. This site also preserves architectural features and a landscape characteristic of a mid-19th century cemetery.

INTRODUCTION

Dr. John Sappington (1776-1856) a prominent pioneer physician of Saline County, Missouri, established this family cemetery in 1831. The two-acre cemetery contains 110 marked graves and is enclosed by a stone wall topped with an iron picket fence constructed in 1859. The cemetery contains the graves of two Missouri governors.

Dr. Sappington studied medicine in Kentucky and in 1804 he married Jane Breathitt, the sister of Kentucky Governor John Breathitt. The Sappingtons immigrated to central Missouri's "Boonslick Country" in 1817, settling near present-day Glasgow, Missouri. By 1819, they had moved 5 miles southwest of Arrow Rock, where Dr. Sappington established a farm named "Pilot Hickory".

Malarial fever, known as "shaking ague" was a major disease along the Missouri River. A nonconformist, Dr. Sappington attacked the common medical practice of bloodletting to treat patients. By 1832, he perfected and began mass marketing quinine in pill form to treat malaria. The St. Louis Medical Society denounced him as a quack, but his "anti-fever pills" quickly became a popular and widely available frontier prescription. In 1844, Sappington wrote The Theory and Treatment of Fevers, the first medical treatise published west of the Mississippi River.

Dr. Sappington was also a business entrepreneur, agriculturalist, and land speculator. He never ran for political office but he was a powerful political broker in the Democratic Party. He was close friends with Missouri's senior US Senator Thomas Hart Benton and with President Andrew Jackson. Dr. Sappington was a part of a political dynasty that expanded substantially when two sons-in-law – Meredith Miles Marmaduke and Claiborne Fox Jackson and one grandson, John Sappington Marmaduke – each became Missouri governors. An educational trust fund established by Dr. Sappington still provides scholarships to local students. A tribute to his life's work, the sarcophagus on his grave bears this inscription: "A truly honest man is the noblest work of God. He lay like a warrior taking his rest."

Meredith Miles Marmaduke (1791-1864) was elected Lt. Governor in 1840. A Benton Democrat and strong unionist, he became Missouri's eighth governor for nine months in 1844 upon Governor Reynolds death in office. Marmaduke marries Dr. Sappington's daughter Lavinia in 1826. A Santa Fe trader from 1824 to 1830, Marmaduke quit the trade to become a partner in his father-in-law's enterprises. He also served as Saline County Judge and surveyor. His son, John Sappington Marmaduke, became Missouri's twenty-fifth governor in 1885 and is buried in Jefferson City.

Claiborne Fox Jackson (1806-1862) was beginning his term as Missouri's fifteenth governor when the Civil War began. Jackson supported slavery and advocated the secession of Missouri from the Union. Federal troops occupied the capital of Jefferson City in June of 1861, forcing Jackson and pro-secession officials to flee and join Confederate forces in the south. Jackson died while in Little Rock, Arkansas and his remains were re-interred in the Sappington Cemetery after the war. Jackson married three of Dr. Sappington's daughters. Jane and Louisa died early in their marriages and are buried near their parents. Eliza survived Jackson by two years and is buried next to him.

Management of this cemetery was shifted in 1970 when the state legislature assigned cemeteries that contained the grave of former governors not within a perpetual-care cemetery to the Department of Natural Resources.
